The night is quiet. Outside, little flakes of snow begin to fall.
"Wow!" says Rudy.

On the TV, Wes's dad tells everyone about the weather that's coming. Strong winds will move the snow into big piles on the ground the next morning. "Stay tuned and follow me for updates through the night!" Elijah says.

On Sesame Street, neighbors talk, call, and text each other, to get ready together. They make plans to shovel snow, bring out games, and buy food to have fun inside while the snow falls outside.

Grown-ups are planning. They read the newspaper, ask their phones, and listen to radios to see how the weather will change the roads, and how much snow will fall.

In the morning, snow is everywhere! "Look Mommy Maggie," Rudy says. "Sesame Street looks like a white blanket covered with fluffy pillows. I have an idea! Let's make blanket forts inside!"

As Maggie and Rudy get comfy making their fort, others begin cutting their own paper snowflakes, baking treats, and creating their own snowy-day playlists to dance to!

Some friends are calling family that live far away and sending photos to show all the snow that is falling. Rudy looks outside at the soft, white snow piles. He starts to wiggle. He's ready to play!

Later, Rudy tiptoes into the snow, feeling his feet sink a little with each step. Together, they make snow angels and take pictures of a snow family they make.

Back inside, Rudy, Abby, and Mommy Maggie talk about their day and listen to the weather report on the news. Tomorrow is going to be warm and sunny.

"Oh no!" Rudy says. "Will our snow person melt?"

"In case he does," says Mommy Maggie, "let's remember all our fun today by drawing him here."
